7. CONCLUSION

In short, the integration of culture and tourism industry includes five aspects, the integration of development concepts, the integration of the protection and utilization of cultural resources, the integration of industrial development, the integration of market management, and the integration of cultural exchanges. Tourism and culture are inherently intertwined. In the era of mass tourism, with the improvement of people's living standards and knowledge levels, culture and tourism are more inseparable. Tourism is no longer simply sightseeing, but also an important channel for people to broaden their horizons, learn knowledge and enhance their culture. From an economic and industrial point of view, culture is the best resource for tourism, and tourism is the largest market for culture.

On the one hand, we should see that culture and tourism influence and interact with each other when we study the integrated development of culture and tourism, and on the other hand, we must also see that culture and tourism have their own internal characteristics and their own development laws. We must respect the law of development, take the market as the guide, take the product as the core, take the service as the guarantee, and do a good job in relevant research and work.
